Delaware among first states to receive Race to the Top funding

DOVER – With Monday’s announcement that Delaware was among the first states chosen to receive federal funding for education through the Race to the Top program, House Education Committee chair Rep. Terry Schooley, D-Newark, issued the following statement:

“This is absolutely wonderful news for the state and our children. All the stakeholders came together and worked toward a common goal, and it shows in Delaware being one of the first states to receive the Race to the Top federal grant. This shows to the rest of the country how committed we are to educating our kids. Part of the money we receive will go to help high poverty-area schools, ensuring that all kids receive an opportunity for a quality education. But now it’s not just about words, it’s about action. We have to take these plans, which target making sure all kids succeed, and put them into practice.”
